15 Things You Can Do Right Now To Help Your Career

Most career advice you receive focuses on the big picture: how to get ahead, how to "win," and such things that are on a much larger scale than the daily grind that most of us face. In fact, it is that day to day grind that pulls down many of us - we go to work, come home exhausted, and often feel as though we're just spinning our wheels.

If you want to get ahead in your career and in your life, you need to start small and look at the immediate things you can do to help out your situation. If you're sitting out there at your desk, tiredly wondering if there's something better that you can be doing with your life, start with these fifteen tips that you can start executing immediately that will lead you down a path towards a better career.

Beorganised for a stress free tax return

- by Jeanne Viljoen

If you are an individual, you more than likely do not have your own accounting department getting your records ready for tax return. This then ends up being a last minute scramble and results in stress and sleepless nights.

The courage to make more money

Clutter's Compound Interest, by Suzie Orman

Clutter in our lives leads to more clutter - the clutter of stuff in closets, cupboards, basements, and attics. Think of your bedroom, your bathroom, your kitchen and kitchen drawers, the garage, your shelves, just think of the clutter. A huge industry has arisen to help us manage and contain our clutter. Think of the irony.

Hard Times are in store

It seems inevitable that South Africans are facing a dim financial future. In the past we were an export country, but things are starting to change very fast!

2008 is the second year that we have had to import both wheat and corn. The number of commercial farmers in South Africa has shrunk from 40 000 to 10 000. This pushes up the food price as we have to compete with other countries to import our food.
